

TIMELESSgray

Gray's not trendy, but it is stylish — an important distinction, says Port Washington designer Keith Baltimore. In his design for this Sands Point kitchen, the color grounds the longish space that, if left white, might appear to go on forever. The gray built-ins create a sense of permanence, while the shade's adaptability allows for easy updating. "When you do a kitchen, you want to stay as classic as possible with the stuff that's built in and be trendy with the accessories, so your kitchen can evolve. . . . It was timeless in the '50s. It could have been built in the '50s, and it would still be in style today, had it not been ripped out in the '80s. You keep it long enough, it comes back in style."

NEWSDAY PHOTO / ALEJANDRA VILLA

This kitchen in Sands Point was designed by Keith Baltimore of Port Washington.